FRIDAY APRIL 22, 1955

Must Look Further

Albert Einstein was a dedicated man. He was unquestionably endowed with a supernatural mind. It could be said that his great intellect was not of his own making. However, it must be admitted that in dedicating his unusual faculties, he did so unselfishly and at no time in his brilliant career did he attempt to use his talents for his own glorification in any respect.

A study of his life and his accomplishments is enough to cause a person to stop and think. His achievements have led mankind to delve into the unknown; even into what we might term the supernatural. During the time that Albert Einstein was developing theories and exploring the unknown, he appeared to be inspired by the desire to serve mankind and the world.

It is true that the development of the atom bomb received its start and its impetus from the renowned scientist. It must also be remembered that no person advocated peace and goodwill more than Einstein, even though he himself was forced to flee from his native country.

It is difficult to understand why and how a person such as Einstein, without a particularly significant background and without unusual training, could develop such a mentality as to be able to so far exceed the thinking of any men in history in not only discovering the secrets of the universe but in actually finding the way to alter nature itself.

We doubt seriously that the examination of the departed scientist's brain will reveal much. In our opinion we must accept Einstein as a factor in the affairs of the universe which is unexplainable by material reasoning. In other words, in practically all cases where men have attained great success and prominence, many contributing factors have been discovered. In the case of Einstein, we must look further than the usual type of reasoning to explain why.

LISTEN AMERICANS!

... by Dr. George S. Benson
DIRECTOR - NATIONAL EDUCATION PROGRAM
Searcy, Arkansas

At the end of World War II, the conspirators who were by then manipulating propaganda in every field of American life needed to break down the American citizens' love of country and their will to safeguard its system, and thus prepare the way for a take-over by the Communists. "Patriotism" became a word used only by "reactionaries." Loyalty to the "world" under 'world government" became an aspiration toward which many school children were directed. "World citizenship" was a slogan on many campuses.

In some cases loyal Americans were so confused they lent their talents to formulating educational materials and techniques subordinating patriotism, subordinating the value of our national sovereignty, subordinating even the religious aspects of character building and plugging for socialistic enterprises an international government superseding our own.

A striking example of the beginning of what seems hopefully to be an educational swing back toward love of God and country and respect for our American economic system is to be found in the transformation wrought in the controversial high school civics textbook, Magruder's American Government, a national scholastic "best seller"' for 38 years. In last week's column I mentioned that the whole atmosphere of the book had been changed during a re-writing period begun when heavy criticism was voiced by parents over the 1946 edition.

Here is a paragraph from the opening chapter of the 1946 textbook: "When we have definite international laws and an army to enforce them we should have international peace. For instance, when atomic bombs are made only by a word government and used only by a world army, who could resist? The United Nations formed by the Allies is a step in that direction." In championing the surrender of "some" of our national sovereignty, the book quotes writer E. Stanley Jones: "Center yourself on yourself and make yourself sovereign, and that self will go to pieces. That is true of the individual, and it is true of the group or nation."

In the 1955 edition these passages do not appear. Here is an excerpt typical of the orientation of the rewritten 1955 book: "As the leader of the free nations of the world, the United States is working for a lasting peace among all nations. But at the same time we know that the only sure guarantee of peace in today's strife-torn world lies in our own strength and in that of our allies. We oppose the Soviet-led communist dictatorships because we love liberty even more than we prize peace. We agree with Patrick Henry that peace is not to be bought at the price of chains and slavery."

Health For All

Cue For Laughter

If you were writing a tragedy, you wouldn't give your hero a case of hiccups. On film or on stage, "hic" is a signal for laughter. But all joking aside, while hiccups may be just a nuisance to most people, a serious case may exhaust the patient to the point of death.

The danger of long-continued hiccups was dramatized for all of us when Pope Pius XII suffered a series of attacks which endangered his life. Cases have been recorded which lasted as long as nine months. Drugs, inhalations, and even surgery have been used in the past to control hiccups. A new drug, chlorpromazine, seems to promise good results in most difficult cases.

Hiccup is due to a spasm of the diaphragm, resulting from an irritation of the nerve pathways. The irritation may have a simple cause, such as overeating or drinking or even a fit of laughter. When hiccups come from such simple causes, they usually end of themselves. But they may also be caused by a disease or toxic condition. Hiccups may make it difficult to treat the disease which caused the spasm in the first place. In some cases, it may be necessary to block or crush the phrenic nerve which controls the diaphragm.

It isn't enough to stop the hiccups. The cause must be found and eliminated, or they will return. As few as five days of continued hiccups can leave the patient in a state of exhaustion. If hiccups continue for more than a day, it is wise to consult the doctor. Why suffer unnecessarily when the doctor can stop the spasms and then get at the cause?

Little Talks With Big Thoughts

I first met him at a store where he was buying groceries. He was holding the door for a young mother who had attempted the impossible. She was trying to pull an overloaded cart, control three healthy baby sons, and pass through a door without bumping into it or any other person. He saw her plight and helped her. The next time we met was when he opened a door for me. It was the one of the taxi in which I arrived at the hotel where he worked as a doorman. He, of course, didn't know he. I knew of him and of his many thoughtful deeds. He was as different from the average man as a rose is from a buttercup.

He had never occupied a position where he could be called an executive. He had always worked primarily with his muscles rather than with his brain. He gave to his employer the best that was within him. He was a loving father and husband. He had given to the world through his sons, a doctor, a lawyer and a teacher. Through his daughters he had given a scientist, a nurse and a mother. Now that he was alone with only himself to care for he was working to pay for the education of three young men who were blessed with religious vocations. If you were to ask him why he continued to work when he didn't have to, he would have replied: "God has been good to me, so I am now trying to do some work for Him."

How many people ever stop to think of the many ways that they can repay God for the many blessings that have been bestowed upon them? The man referred to never acquired wealth, but he found a way—humble and quiet—to let God know that he was thankful for all the wonderful blessings that had come to him. In his own modest way he was trying to make repayment. That he was a happy man was self evident. That he was a successful man was proven by his life.

If more men and women were to forget self and think of others and realize that all they have and all they will ever have comes from God, their's and the lives of countless others would be filled with a spirit of contentment that no material wealth can provide.

It is through God's guidance, sought in unending prayer, that His ever-present hand is extended to help us in our weakness and despair When we know and obey Divine Guidance, we are so strong in righteousness that we can never go wrong

Cone Y.M.C.A. Board Reports On Work

Statistical report made to the board of directors of Cone Memorial Y.M.C.A. made news at many points for the month of March: bathing in a warm clean shower room, and the comfort of standing under a gentle refreshing shower after a hard day's work at the plant or on finishing a job in the garage, store, or garden the family simply loads up the family car and drives to the "Y" to clean up. Over nine thousand baths were taken in a single month.

Proximity and White Oak swimming pools were scenes of buzzing activity for family nights on Thursday at Proximity and Friday at White Oak. Regular swimming recreational classes and group acquatics amounted to twenty-three hundred people participating. In addition to the above, 25 swimming teams with 248 participants were given instructions. One-hundred and five people were given personalized instructions and were taught the art of swimming. Life saving classes with 46 people were in training to save life on many fronts.

Basketball finished up its schedule for the spring with many tournaments for boys, girls, men and women's teams and league play. A total of 1529 players made news with their active scoring, playing and winning their respective awards on honors in team or league play.

The Cone Y.M.C.A. game room had one of their better months with over 2,500 games played in individual and league playing. Body building and classes in manly art with some 200 participants reveals much interest in physical fitness and the weight reducing or weight increasing.

Hats are off to the many boys, girls, men and women who volunteered to render service in various capacities in their club, group, class or pool, gymnasium or bowling, basketball team or league a total of 742 hours or about 93 man days of eight hours each. With organized clubs in Cone "Y" there 45 meetings with 889 participants all or democratically organized; maned by volunteer leaders. HERMAN CONE OUTLINES we want our community to prosper; we want those who have invested their savings to make a profit, and we want our people to be paid fairly for the work they do," stated the Cone Mills president.

Traces History

Tracing the history of the Salisbury plant from its origin in 1887 as an outgrowth of a religious revival, Mr. Cone paid tribute to all of the men and women who have had a part in the plant's growth throughout the years.

He reminded the long-service employees that though many things have changed through the years, the reasons for building any business enterprise are the same today as then: help increase the general prosperity of the town, provide opportunities to earn an honest living and to give those who invest their savings a chance to earn a profit.

He pointed out that to start a plant today the size of the original Salisbury Mill, it would take thirty times the amount of money it took then. In those days it took $66,400 to start the 224 loom mill; today it would take two and a quarter million dollars.

Faith In Future

"With policies we are proud of, with supervisors who are interested as individuals, and with employees like those of you here in this room—all working together, I have no real fear of the future, but rather I have great faith in it," declared Mr. Cone.

"Today is like any other day, for it has its problems, problems that affect you and your company, but they are the kind of problems that all of us working together will beat to our mutual advantage," he continued.

Mr. Cone referred specifically to problems caused by unusually stiff competition, low prices of finished products and high costs of raw materials.

Quartet Sings

A quartet made up of E. L. Reeves, Charles Bolden, Ray Bailey, and Reuben Hellard, accompanied by Miss Betty Jarrell, furnished music.

Among the guests was C. S. Morris, Sr., retired vice president of Cone Mills Corporation, and former president of Salisbury Cotton Mills.

Attending from Greensboro in addition to Mr. Herman Cone and Mr. Clarence Cone were Edwin M. Holt, assistant vice president; Chester Arnold, personnel director; W. O. Leonard, Jr., Personnel Department; Lelah Nell Masters and Bob Weaver, Textorian.
